

This immense lamp is suspended directly over one of the sacrificial stones in the Aztec theatre, San Antonio. It is made of hammered sheet metal, and throughout its construction the figures and designs characteristic of the Aztecs were carried out. It is 18 feet in height, 14 feet wide at its widest point and weighs more than a ton and a half. Some 75 high powered lamps hidden in the lower portion send their rays through a multi-colored glass base and provide ample light for the whole lobby when needed. Over 275 smaller globes on candle-like mountings diffuse a soft glow toward the high ceiling. Theodore Voss, president of the Voss Artistic Metal Works, San Antonio, Texas, was the designer, and the work was done in their shop.
