

PRINCESS'S NEW LIFE No Ghosts In The Foyer

THE Princess's Theatre, new home of the "Citizens'" is blushing in all the glory of new paint and decoration. It is resplendent like a bride now that it has been wedded to the high art of theatre.

Harry M'Kelvie, in his accustomed place in the foyer, stood last night, a link with the thirteen-letter pantomimes of the days now gone.

The foyer was no place for ghosts.

There were too many substantial figures, statesmen, scholars and business leaders, jostling in this new Athenaeum—the fresh-looking Princess's—which should, in time, become perhaps less brilliantly self-conscious.
