

Saxe's Oriental a Song of India

Views that suggest the impressive beauty and efficiency of Milwaukee's newest screen palace, Saxe's Oriental. Dick and Bauer designed this $1,500,000 house, selecting for their motif, the art of East India. In the auditorium, Buddhist idols, dragons, elephants and colored lights all blend into a mystic symphony of the Orient. On this page are shown (at top) the auditorium facing the stage; (at left) murals above the auditorium doors; (at right) one of the Buddhas in a wall niche; and (below) the auditorium facing the balcony. The magnificent foyer of this Dick and Bauer theatre is pictured on the following page.

Oriental Triumph of Dick & Bauer

Color and luxury are everywhere as the theme of Dick and Bauer's latest achievement. The Oriental's organ loft, for example, is decorated with red plush draperies, on which two haughty peacocks spread their bejeweled fans. In the lighting fixtures, East Indian idols are used prodigiously. At the top of this page is pictured the splendor of the foyer, photographed facing the grand staircase. At left is shown an elephant decoration; at right, a door to the auditorium; and below, the rich foyer photographed facing the lobby. The Oriental seats 2,500.
