

December 6, 1924

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Washington, D. C.

Feeling that the word "Cosmopolitan" is too long as a title for a theatre, Julian Brylawski, head of the organization which is constructing a large picture theatre and office building at Thirteenth and E streets northwest, has announced that it will be known as the Earle Theatre, being named after a theatre in Philadelphia which is providing the same sort of entertainment that it is planned to offer at the new house. The theatre now under construction is the successor to the Cosmos Theatre, on Pennsylvania avenue near Ninth street, operated by Mr. Brylawski as a picture house for a number of years and now used for burlesque.
